

Robert and Orren's Six-Point Santa Fe Shopping Guide

RP: Double Take for everything cowboy and cowgirl, plus eclectic resale clothes, like my favorite '70s suede jacket.

ODJ: Goler Fine Imported Shoes has an interesting selection for men and women.

RP: Luchese Boot Company is where to find upscale, exotic hide boots made in America.

ODJ: Santa Fe Dry Goods has a great European selection. I just picked up a Sophie Hong silk jacket, a pair of Issey Miyake pants, and a Greg Lauren coat.

RP: Devargas Travelers Market is great for gathering exciting finds of ethnic jewelry and textiles from all over the world, like African indigo fabric converted into a poncho.

ODJ: Shiprock is a modern-day trading post with an impressive selection of Native American jewelry—new and vintage.

FASHION

What's the fashion scene like in Santa Fe?

Robert: Relaxed and casual without rules or judgment. Anything goes—and does!
Orren: Eclectic, laid-back, and totally Southwest.

How should visitors dress?

RP: Layers, to adapt to the temps in all four seasons.
ODJ: Definitely turquoise and Native American jewelry. The black-on-black big-city uniform doesn't work with the light here.

How would you describe your style?

RP: A fancy man who accessorizes with denim in unexpected ways.
ODJ: I consider myself a dandy! I have no gender bias and will wear a dress over jeans. I mix high fashion with streetwear and always accessorize.

Tell us about today's ensembles.

RP: I like the comfort and changing shapes of a skirt. The silver Native American jewelry feels right over my tattoos by Crow from Talis Fortuna studio. My signature eyeglasses are converted Prada sunglasses—all the better to see you with!
ODJ: I always wear necklaces, no matter how heavy. (I keep Advil in my bag!) The googly-eyed bracelets were designed by our friend Iris Apfel. I'm wearing an oversized Eskandar shirt and a chef apron as a dress over custom Levi's 501s. This is a Comme des Garçons Rei Kawakubo icon bag from Louis Vuitton, and I bought the hat from the local flea market. I like to be matchy-matchy, so I spray-paint my hats whatever color I need to match the outfit.
